

France: A Wonderful Vacation Destination

Some people think that France is not a good place to go on vacation. However, the truth is that France is fantastic. The bread is delicious; the people are friendly, and Paris is an awesome city. France is a wonderful vacation destination.

First, the bread in France is cheap and delicious. According to travel writer Christine Merrill, “There’s nothing like walking by a bakery and breathing in baguettes. What’s even better is being able to walk in and buy a warm, crusty loaf for less than a Euro” (Merrill). You are going to love spending time in French bakeries.

Second, the French people are very friendly. According to Ryan Harrison, a writer for the website Love France, French people sometimes need warming up, “but once they’re warm, they’re yours for life” (Harrison). If you make a friend in France, you’ll have someone that you can visit again and again.

Third, Paris is an awesome city. In the words of a blogger called Lauren:

I don’t care how cliché it is, when asked what my favorite city in the world is I always have the same answer – Paris! Of all the cities I’ve ever been to, none so exemplify what a city should be as much as Paris. Whether you’re looking at the Eiffel Tower or walking down an inconspicuous street, the architecture is breathtaking, the city is chocked full of museums and historical sites that inform and open up the imagination, and there’s an abundance of cafes, bars and fine-dining restaurants that make eating (and drinking) the most delicious experiences. When I walk the streets of Paris all my senses are engaged and I feel lit up inside. I really love Paris! (Lauren)

Delicious bread, friendly people, and the wonderful city of Paris—these are some of the things that make France such a wonderful country. If you go to France, you won't regret it. France is a perfect destination for a holiday.
